Rohan broke the table when an earthquake that felt like a bomb went off. He climbed back into his chair and combed his hair, which had been messed up in the explosion. A few crumbs from his dinner floated in the air and landed, without doubt, on his knee. His face and both his upper limbs were numb with shock, but he kept calm. He wondered whether the plumbing in the house had been affected. He was certainly indebted to the strong table for protecting him from the quake, although his thumb had been trapped and squashed by it.
